I've fixed a few, but this one has really gotten my goat. I have a Cocoa app in which I'm drawing a cocoappe's view and when I tap a pushbutton, I'm calling a function that does this: float topPadding = self.view.frame.size.height / 2.0f; self.view.frame.size.width = [self.svgView.nodes boundingBoxForLayerInContext:self.svgView.context].size.width; float leftPadding = self.view.frame.size.width / 2.0f - ([self.svgView.nodes boundingBoxForLayerInContext:self.svgView.context].size.width / 2.0f); float rightPadding = self.view.frame.size.width / 2.0f; self.view.frame.origin.x = self.view.frame.origin.x + leftPadding; [self.svgView.nodes setLayer: [CAShapeLayer layerWithPath:self.svgView.pathNodeCache.cachedSVGPath] autorelease]; These are the lines that give me trouble. If you're familiar with Cocoa, they should be right up your alley. I've tried all kinds of things to get this to work: 1) I've tried changing the 2.0f to 2.0, didn't work. 2) I've tried changing the numbers to float (which, in the old days, caused the app to freeze up). 3) I've tried changing the order of operations. Not the result I'm looking for there either. The only other thing that I can think of is that somewhere between Mavericks and my update, something changed that I wasn't aware of, so I'd have to chalk it up to the fact that I'm just really inexperienced with Cocoa and OOP and such. A: Since you are using the same width, I think the problem is that the height is not what

This is a continuation of previous awards in which we have demonstrated that severe burn injury initiates a pattern of apoptotic neuronal death in the spinal cord and hippocampus. The studies were undertaken to examine the molecular mechanisms of this selective neuronal death, and to test the role of various molecular events in this process. A 50% total body surface area full-thickness burn injury reduced the number of apoptotic cells in the lumbar spinal cord by one-third compared to unburned animals. In contrast, the molecular changes in the hippocampus were much more complex; the number of apoptotic cells in hippocampal neurons in burn injured rats was increased by 50%. Molecular analyses indicated that Fas and FasL
