Photoshop is a well-loved, state-of-the-art graphics editing and image-processing program. Photoshop is available for nearly every computer and operating system. It gives you complete control over your photos by helping you edit, print and share them in many different ways. Photoshop contains a powerful set of tools and features that allow you to work quickly and efficiently. You can change the color of a photo, add depth to your images, fix photos that are out of focus, or crop and edit photos to get the best pictures. There are two versions of Photoshop: Adobe Photoshop and Photoshop Elements. The first version is called the original version of Photoshop. It is known for its good features and the ability to offer ultimate control over your photographs. It comes with rich editing and retouching tools. The second version is called Photoshop Elements. It is a simpler and smaller version. It doesn't contain all of the features of the original version and doesn't offer the same capabilities. Photoshop Elements does have many of the features and tools you might find useful. What is Photoshop? Photoshop is one of the world's most popular graphics editing programs. It includes a host of sophisticated, powerful tools. It does this by organizing the tools in layers, so you can work on layers of the same file. When you view an image in Photoshop, layers of the same image are stacked one on top of the other. You can use most Photoshop editing tools to edit individual layers. Photoshop also has powerful features that allow you to apply changes to the entire image. In the previous example, you can see that the Layer Mask feature has been used to mask the red flower (layer on top of layer) and reveal the color in the background. You can use most Photoshop tools to edit either a single layer or several layers. You can also view the changes made in each layer of the image. It's easy to customize your Photoshop workspace. If you want, you can choose which tools you use most frequently and set the workspace to display them in one place. Have you ever compared two images and selected parts of one, then applied those same changes to the other picture? Photoshop allows you to do this, and you can easily swap specific layers. Sharing photos with a network (such as your computer at the office or your phone) or email is quick and easy. You can make a selection from an image and then quickly copy and paste 05a79cecff

UK scientists say court ruling to cancel nuke plans damaging By our reporters 8 December 2018 Scientists around the world are expressing consternation over a legal ruling by the House of Lords in London that obliges the government to abandon plans to build six new nuclear reactors in England, claiming the ruling is "dangerous, unnecessary, and ultimately likely to cause an unnecessary increase in public risk." At the heart of the ruling is the attempt of an anti-nuclear movement to delay construction of the new facilities, ostensibly to allow the government time to negotiate an agreement with France to supply nuclear energy. Against this background, the court stated the government's decision to proceed with the construction of the new reactors, without a full impact assessment, was not in accordance with the Environmental Protection Act. The court went on to conclude that the government had disregarded the findings of the committee charged with making the assessment. Lord Hogg, who sat in the Upper House of the House of Lords, was unequivocal in his criticism of the court's action: "It is apparent that the government has not set out its case in accordance with the requirements of law and that there is a material risk of serious public harm arising from the consequences of its plan for nuclear power production." Lord Wilson, the barrister acting for Greenpeace UK, also spoke of the "unnecessary risk" of the ruling. It is now up to the government to decide whether it will challenge the ruling in the UK Supreme Court. The UK has two existing nuclear reactors at the Hinkley Point site in Somerset. There has been heavy criticism of the way in which the government has made this decision, with the National Audit Office releasing a report in May concluding that the public could see costs rise as much as £16 billion without any benefit of carbon emission reductions. This would also involve an average deficit of £400 million per year over 20 years. More than 100 eminent scientists, including dozens of Nobel laureates, have signed a statement expressing "deep concern" at the decision to scrap the reactors. In an open letter, they write, "The consequences of the government's decision to abandon the new nuclear build, which it described as a 'terrible mistake,' could be disastrous for the UK, tarnishing the UK's world leading reputation and damaging the economy for years to come.�
