Q: Do we have to write all the methods of a class within the class block in Java? If we already define the class "MainClass" and have written the required methods, how can we define a new class, say "NewClass", which again contains the required methods? Is it correct to write all the methods within the class block? Or do we have to write all the methods of a new class within a different class block?

public class MainClass{ public static void main(String[] args){ NewClass tc = new NewClass(); } } class b7e8fdf5c8
